Englewood sets special election to fill councilmember’s seat

on: February 07, 2018

Council was deadlocked on replacement for departing mayor

BY PETER JONES
NEWS EDITOR

Left at an impasse with a deadlocked City Council, Englewood has opted to hold a special election, rather than appoint an interim replacement for a departing councilmember.

The District 1 election, which will cost the city approximately $15,000, will be held in early May, leaving the city without a mayor or direct District 1 representation until then.

The typically seven-member council, which selects the mayor from within its ranks, was reduced to an evenly divided six members last month with the departure of Mayor Joe Jefferson, who resigned after being elected last November as municipal judge.

Since then, the philosophically split council—often divided 3-3—had been unable to reach agreement on the type of candidate that should replace the long-serving Jefferson, who represented Englewood’s northernmost District 1.

Four finalists emerged from an original pool of nine applicants, with a different two of the four staunchly preferred by each of the three-member camps.

“I think both sides are honestly having a fundamental disagreement on what the role of the councilperson is and what our focus ought to be,” District 3 Councilmember Laurett Barrentine said. “In all fairness, I think each side is honest and sincere in their commitment to pick the best people.”
Barrentine, a leader in the sometimes-controversial Englewood Citizens for Open Government, had joined fellow conservatives Rita Russell, Englewood’s mayor pro tem, and District 4 newcomer Dave Cuesta, a professed budget hawk, in one of the two camps.

According to Barrentine, her group favored budget-oriented candidates with experience on the city’s boards and commissions while characterizing the opposition’s preferences as more geared to “social services” and “environmental” issues.

The first group’s top picks were Andrea Manion, a former accountant for Arapahoe County government, and Carson Green, president of CyGen Technologies and a former chair of the Englewood Board of Adjustment and Appeals.

The second camp on the council includes at-large Councilmember Amy Martinez, District 2’s Linda Olson and at-large newcomer Cheryl Wink, who says her de facto group used a grading methodology to reach its consensus.

“The candidates selected by Amy, myself and Linda seemed to have a much better understanding of all of District 1,” Wink said. “There was a breadth and depth of professional skills and tools that would contribute very well to the skills and tools that are already existing among council.”

Wink’s group preferred Othoniel Sierra, a member of the Citizens Alliance for a Sustainable Englewood, and businessman Scott Danford, a member of the board of directors for the Greater Englewood Chamber of Commerce.

Facing an irreconcilable impasse on Jan. 24, the council voted 5-1 to settle the issue in a special election, with Wink, who had unsuccessfully advocated hosting a public forum for all the candidates, as the lone holdout.

“I think it’s important that the seventh member be an independent thinker,” Wink said. “What I don’t want to see is the seventh member as a member of one camp or another.”

Barrentine was a strong supporter of letting District 1 voters settle the deadlock.

“District 1 didn’t get to pick me,” the District 3 councilmember emphasized. “I think they’re better off going without representation for 90 days and having someone the district picks that they believe represents them, rather than going two years and having somebody that the council has agreed to that may not be the best fit.”
The majority of the council also agreed that the council should wait to choose its mayor until the full seven-member council has been seated.

“What if the seventh person is the best choose for mayor?” Wink said.

What’s more, the philosophically divided council may have had difficulty agreeing on a mayor anyway, and Wink says the 3-3 divide is likely to rear its head again in coming months.

“I think we’ll more than likely be split on a lot of issues for the next several months, which is unfortunate for the city,” she said.

Barrentine is less concerned, noting that rules dictate an issue fails in face of a tie vote.

“Government isn’t known for speedy progress, and that’s a good thing because we don’t want kneejerk reactions going on. If we’re that divided, maybe it’s something that needs to take more time and more thought,” she said.

In the meantime, Wink, who lives in District 1, says she intends to be increasingly cognizant of her residency as she fills her at-large role on council.

“I have District 1 support and people here have been reaching out to me over a number of different issues,” she said. “I feel I can at least serve that role for the interim.”

The May election will not be limited to the council’s four finalists. Interested candidates may pick up election materials at the Englewood City Center.
Unified hoops teams play to big applause

Englewood, Arapahoe compete on Pirates' home court

Seats were hard to find and a large crowd of family and friends made the walls of the Englewood High School gymnasium ring as they cheered loudly for plays by both teams on Jan. 26, when the Englewood unified team played Arapahoe.

The baselines at both ends of the court were lined with high school students who joined the fans in the stands cheering whenever either team made a shot.

Unified teams are made up of Special Olympics and regular athletes, and the Englewood-Arapahoe teams played between the junior varsity and varsity games that pitted the Weld Central girls basketball teams against their Englewood counterparts.

Angela Cordova, mother of a Special Olympics athlete, said the unified program is a great thing for her daughter and her teammates.

A special ceremony was held at halftime as each player was awarded a varsity letter and a gold bar indicating they had lettered more than one season for players who had been awarded a varsity letter for play in previous seasons.

“My daughter has been playing with this team for six years and she loves it,” Cordova said. “She looks forward to all the practices and games. It gives her a fun way to exercise and she works to get better at basketball. For example, she used to shoot all her shots granny style. Now she shoots overhand.”

Cordova said she loves the program too because she loves being around all these kids and they just melt her heart.

The unified basketball rules are very different. The player is free to dribble the ball or carry it up the court. There is no attempt to block the shot and if the player misses, he or she is handed the ball by a player for his or her team or from the opposing team to take another shot.

A volunteer stands at the baseline under the hoop with a basketball goal on a pole so it will be on the right level for players in wheelchairs or players who are not strong enough to shoot the ball as high as the backboard.

Englewood has had a unified team since the 1970s. Originally the team was called the South Siders, but coach Kim DeHaven said the team name was changed to Englewood because Englewood High School is their home court.

“We have 11 players on our team,” she said. “They have a lot of fun playing games and I they also enjoy the team building and the camaraderie with teammates on both teams.”

She has been coaching the team for six years and said she loves the kids and working with them.
“I have two unified team partners who are on the court with their teammates at times,” DeHaven said. “Cole Mellon-Fergus is our basketball player and our other partner is Angie Martinez, a team mom.”

The coach noted the team plays eight to 10 games a season and the season is about over.

“We will wrap up the season at the March 3 tournament at Chatfield High School,” she said. “It is a long day for the kids as we play three games in one day. But I know they will give it their best effort like they always do.”

Englewood player Katie Corinke, who is in high school, said she loves the program and has been playing basketball since she was in the sixth grade.

“I love basketball. It is my favorite sport,” she said. “I like basketball because I get a lot of exercise and I like playing basketball with all my friends. Basketball is a lot of fun. I think the most fun is making my shots and I have a lot of fun because I think I am a pretty good shot.”
Homeless share stories on day for metro survey

Point-in-time effort sends volunteers out to conduct tally of people

Posted Friday, February 2, 2018 5:34 pm

What the count tells us about homelessness
The Point-in-Time count is carried out under the United States Department of Housing and Urban Development, commonly known as HUD.

Volunteers and service providers around the nation come together to conduct the annual count during the last 10 days of January, according to the Metro Denver Homeless Initiative.

The Denver-metro count includes the seven-county metro area, which is made up of Adams, Arapahoe, Boulder, Broomfield, Denver, Douglas and Jefferson counties.

For the most recent numbers available, gathered in January 2017 and released in June:

• Of the 5,116 total homeless people counted, 507 respondents reported that domestic violence was a contributing factor to their homeless situation, and 569 identified as veterans.

• A total of 1,085 were chronically homeless, and 616 of those individuals reported having some type of mental illness.

• Data included people in transitional housing, those in emergency shelters and those with no shelter.

• The count did not include people staying in motels paid for by themselves, or sleeping on couches with friends or family. It should be noted that the survey is subject to voluntary participation and is a “snapshot” of the homeless population — actual numbers may be higher.

“I don't smoke, don't drink — rent's too high,” said Kevin Murphy, a 56-year-old homeless man who spends time in the Englewood area. “I'm saving up money.”

Murphy is one of the dozen or so homeless individuals who came to the Faith Community Center church by bus from Giving Heart, a homeless service center in Englewood, on the night of Jan. 29 when volunteers and agencies spread out to count how many homeless people stay in the seven-county Denver metro area, part of the national Point-in-Time survey.

“My goal, instead of living month-to-month, is to save up six months' rent,” said Murphy, who grew up in Littleton and works at a church near Bemis Public Library there. After living with another person and paying rent for five years in the Littleton area, rising rent pushed him out, and he's been on the street for a year bouncing between different shelters.

“Wherever I can find a place to stay at night,” Murphy said.

He's used services at Giving Heart, where people in need can eat lunch, use a computer lab, receive mail and fill out paperwork for government assistance, but he says the area lacks overnight shelters.

“In Englewood and Littleton, there are really no overnight shelters” unless it's severely cold out, Murphy said.

Faith Community Center church in south Jefferson County, where people were bused for the night, is one of the local facilities that participates with the Severe Weather Shelter Network. The nonprofit works to shelter homeless individuals at those locations in dry weather of 20 degrees or below and wet weather of 32 degrees or below. Volunteers for the Point-in-Time effort came to survey people Jan. 29.

Tony Cabrera, 22, also came to the church by bus from Englewood.

“I came here to this state trying to get a decent education (and) go to college,” said Cabrera, who came to Colorado from Washington state. “That didn't happen, so I'm looking at a GED.”

Homeless for seven years, Cabrera often sleeps outside and frequents the central Denver area. He went to a metro-area high school but got expelled for having a fight, he said. He's stuck out here, since both his parents have died and he's lost contact with the rest of his family, Cabrera said.

“I just keep coming back to the shelters, over and over again,” Cabrera said. He's had his documents stolen while staying on the street — passport, state ID, birth certificate and medical records — so he's waiting to get some legal papers renewed to help get back on his feet. In the meantime, he comes to Giving Heart and tries to get the word out for other churches to connect with that organization, where he's gotten blankets, clothes, hygienic products and other help.

Rich Newton, 32, also came to the church during the survey.

Englewood is “kinda my home base,” said Newton, who has been homeless for about a year and stays in the area of Hampden Avenue and South Broadway. Death in his family, other family issues, problems with drugs, mental illness and losing his job contributed to becoming homeless, he said.

“Most (homeless) people here, if they're being honest,” have experienced most of that, Newton added.

Resources like Giving Heart and HOPE food pantry in Englewood have been integral to helping him get back on his feet. Newton's personal goal is to have a steady paycheck when springtime rolls around and to find shelter — a vehicle or a roommate, perhaps.

Over the past year, Newton has seen what seems to be a decrease in homeless people in his area.

“They'll go migrate to Denver or stay in Littleton,” said Newton, who said he has been contacted by the police multiple times.

“They push you out to a different place,” Newton said, “and then that place puts you back.”
Scented Studio is all about enchanting fragrances

Central Englewood store is unusual operation that lets customers choose blends

When Cindy Dasslinger Vasilas moved her Scented Studio to 3437 S. Broadway, it made Englewood home to a unique business where staff assists customers to create their own unique fragrance.

“When I decided to make fragrance creation my career, I searched to see if there were similar businesses,” the Centennial resident said. “I found a few businesses but all of them helped customers create fragrances that were used to make specific products like bath oils, perfumes or soap. We offer customers the opportunity to create their own fragrance that can be used perfume, cologne, bath oil, soap and number of other bath and beauty products.”

She said no formal training was available, and neither were owners of other shops she could ask about setting up and operating the business. So she did an extensive amount of reading and even then, a lot of the lessons were learned by trial and error.

“It is a matter of training the olfactory senses to respond and be open to detecting a wide range of fragrances,” she said. “Basically the primary skill is to have a nose for fragrances.”

People coming into the Scented Salon are greeted by staff members who tell them about the cabinets filled with prepared products.

An individual who want to create his or her own fragrance then joins a staff member at the oil table, where there are more than 500 scented oils to choose from. There are floral oils like rose and orchid, sweet oils like sugars, and clean oils like mountain meadow and rain.

A small amount of a client's oil choices are placed on small fragrance strips so the person can smell the combinations of scents. When the client decides on his or her fragrance, those oils are used to create the body or bath product or products the customer selects. The cost for using the chosen oil to create a product can range from $19.95 to more than $100.

Client Esther Shufutinsky created her own unique fragrance at the oil table on Jan. 13.

“I am visiting my daughter, we found this shop and I decided to check it out,” the Dallas resident said. “I really didn't know what to expect but it was a great experience. The staff was so helpful and I am really pleased that I have now created my own unique fragrance that will be used to make bars of soap.”

She said it was a fun experience that she would recommend to anyone.

Dasslinger Vasilas said another option is the workshop. The clients watch a video about how personal fragrances are created. Then they are provided 22 oils and staff members assist them as they pick up to five scents that will be used to create their unique perfume or cologne. The cost of the workshop is $55 or $75 per person depending on the size of the product created. Customers who pay $75 create three times as much perfume or cologne.

“We have also become a popular bachelorette and bridal shower party location,” the owner said. “We feel that the appeal is our services are unique and probably not like other party themes. Those coming to the party can bring their own refreshment and we play the music they like to enhance the party atmosphere.”

Dasslinger Vasilas said one surprise was Scented Studio's services also appeal to men.

“We thought we probably 20 percent of those who take advantage of our services would be men,” she said. “The surprise is that about 49 percent of our clients are men.”

The Scented Salon opened in Cherry Creek mall area. After six years, their building was scheduled for demolition and the decision was made to move to the Broadway location in Englewood. The business opened in the new location in May 2017.

“We are glad to be in Englewood and just love it here,” she said. “We were welcomed to Englewood by city officials and other merchants.”

She added that return clients are a big part of the business and getting the word about what the studio does is because it offers a unique service. But she said the business has done OK so far and, as the word gets out, the hope is more people will come in and learn about unique fragrance creation.

City of Englewood - City Council

Annual Update for Year-Ending 2017

Date: Monday, February 05, 2018

Good evening, Your Honor and Members of City Council,

My name is Marcia McGilley and I am the Executive Director of the Aurora-South Metro Small Business Development Center, also known as the SBDC.

In 2017, we began a very productive strategic partnership between the City of Englewood and the SBDC. As your Economic Development team wanted to engage businesses on a more meaningful level, we became your “boots on the ground” for small business services.

We offer free and confidential one-on-one consulting for your citizens, robust start-up workshops and events.
Through our collaboration in the past year, we have some impressive results to share:

Served 99 citizens for over 250 hours of consulting
56% of the citizens in business, balance looking to start a biz
Held 8 Workshops with 98 Attendees
Assisted 10 citizens with Initiation/Acceleration Grants
Promoted the City’s Scholarship Program for our Workshops

Economic Impact from these consulting and training sessions:
Jobs created: 16
Jobs retained: 21
Business starts: 3
Capital formation: $304,400
Sales increase: $430,305
Commercial contracts: 1 in the amount of $1.5M
New in 2018:

March 15, 2018 – Business Resource Fair

Starting a Food Establishment workshop with Tri-County Health

Small Manufacturer’s Advantage program – outreach calls and consulting for light industrial companies

2018 – Convening a committee to investigate a City of Englewood “Small Business Institute” to replace the SBA Emerging Leaders program

SBA - Small Business Saturday program (Sat of Thanksgiving)

Englewood Chamber of Commerce partnership – Lunch & Learn

The Colorado SBDC Network (consisting of 14 SBDC Center’s across the state of Colorado) has a rigorous process of certifying our business consultants. The process consists of submitting a resume, attending interviews and passing 5 online modules. Module topics include: code of conduct, starting a small business, consulting techniques, assistance and resource programs in the state, and finally recordkeeping and financial analysis.
I am pleased to announce that is Darren Hollingsworth is the first Economic Development staff member in the State of Colorado to become a Certified SBDC Network Consultant. This credential allows the City of Englewood to add credibility in its outreach efforts to business owners; track, measure and trend data which will be readily available for reporting purposes.

Darren, please come forward to receive your certificate.

Congratulations!

This has truly been a meaningful, strategic partnership between the City of Englewood and the SBDC ... and we look forward to continuing to serve your business citizens with high quality consulting and training services in 2018.

This concludes my comments. Thank you!

Marcia McGilley
